

CGI's IT Asset Management – Contract Management

CGI's Contract Management bridges the gap between procurement and IT and business to maximize long-term value to the organization.

Procurement challenges organizations face

The software and hardware contracts that organizations own represent a significant part of your IT budget. As such, you don't want to pay for products and licenses that you are not using, nor do you want to risk an audit and added expense for using more than what you paid for.

The procurement team tasked with negotiating these contracts often lack the information required to determine the best product solution, quantities, license volumes, terms and conditions, and contract duration to benefit the organization.

In parallel, the IT department may be aware of the technical infrastructure, but not of the implications that the infrastructure may have on the license volumes that apply.

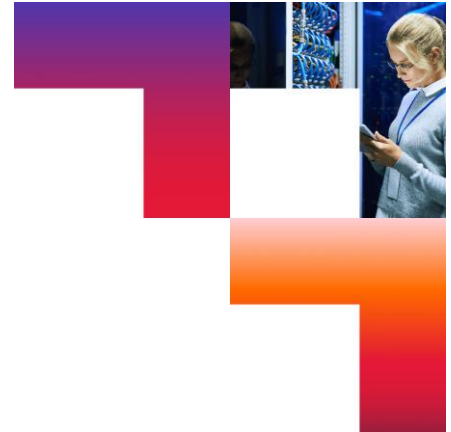

As a result, contracts are negotiated with less than optimal results.

CGI's Contract Management can help ensure you only purchase what you need

As part of CGI's IT Asset Management (ITAM) portfolio, we offer a Contract Management service that consists of a framework and corresponding processes that strategically track and manage all financial, physical, licensing and contractual aspects of your IT assets throughout their life cycle.

To achieve best results, our team of experts starts well before the end date of a contract by gathering information from your IT department and the business. Based on your strategic plans, IT roadmap and planned usage, our team determines the best products, license volumes and contract duration that will benefit your organization.

For client products, it is beneficial to review how many users actually use the product or subscription to assess the number of licenses
